Knox County Farmer.

Rotation.
A judicious rotation of crops is absolutely necessary in maintaining the fertility of the soil. This needs no demonstration, for it is universally admitted. But how to rotate to secure the greatest advantages is the main question. No special directions can be given to suit every case, because "circumstances alter cases," very much in regard to this point. The system that would succeed on one farm would utterly fail on another, and vice versa. Governed by general principles, the farmer must decide this matter for himself. Each crop extracts from the soil the elements essential to its growth and prosperity, and by continuous cropping, however judicious the rotation may be, the soil will eventually be exhausted. Hence the elements abstracted must be returned to the soil in the shape of fertilizers. This is the point—that farmers must keep stock, and the nearer they come to keeping stock enough to consume what their farms produce, the nearer they come to most improved culture.
The usual rotation is from the soil—corn, oats, or barley, wheat, and then grass. In good soil two crops of wheat can be grown, wheat being sown on the first in the spring which will furnish one crop, and one to plow under for second crop of wheat, on which grass is sown for future meadow or pasture land. A prominent agricultural reporter, as the first in six years' rotation: First year, corn, potatoes, and roots, with ground heavily manured; second, oats; third, clover, plowed in and sowed with wheat in the fall; then timothy and clover mixed on the wheat in the spring of the fourth year, then let it lay in grass two years.
Other systems of rotation have their advantages, suited to the soil, the circumstances of soil, climate, etc. In wheat districts, where the soil rests on limestone or plaster, a simple rotation of clover two years and wheat one year, is found to be good, always promising that plenty of manure is returned to the soil. Let us hear from our readers on this subject.—Ohio Farmer.

Remedies for Choked Cattle.

A Quaker has a remedy for choked cattle, which has never failed when tried. It is a teaspoonful of soft soap dissolved in a pint, or a little more, of soft water, and poured down the throat of the choked animal. A soon as administered, the apple or potato is thrown up instantly upon passing the hand upon and alone the throat. He allows his cattle to eat apples and potatoes upon lying down, being positive that if one should be he can relieve the animal instantly.
A correspondent says that cattle may be relieved when choked by being made to jump over a bar left as high as the animal can be made jump. J. B. Jones says that a good way is to make a ball of tobacco, and put it in the animal's mouth as far back as possible, which will cause vomiting and speedy relief. Now, as the animal is a dangerous method, and the second, tobacco, may not be handy, the best thing I ever saw (and I never knew it fail), is to take a round stick, eighteen inches long, and put it in the animal's mouth, and push it down the throat, and it will make it sick like tobacco. I have seen it tried a great many times in this section.

Horses at Rest.

There is no reason for anxiety from the fact that a horse does not lie down when he sleeps. It is natural for many horses to sleep on their feet, and no doubt it is a good thing that they can do so. A hard-working horse can catch many a nap while stopping for a short rest, if he is dependent upon lying down. Nevertheless, it is good for a horse to lie down at night, and there is no better way of inducing him to do so than to give him a clean dry bed in a roomy stall. A horse that has ever lain down in a narrow stall, and had trouble in getting up, will surely be as an intelligent animal, be cautious about the subject, especially if he is a little nervous, especially if any accident has happened to him in his stall.

Why Potatoes Run Out.

There are two grand reasons. There are but few potatoes in a hill that are fit for seed. Some are overgrown, coarse rank, and will not transmit the original quality. Others are undergrown, and not fully developed seed. A potato of medium size, perfect in all its parts, with a change of ground, will produce its like ad infinitum. One other reason—cutting potatoes between stem and seed and continually is wrong. It requires the stem and seed, and to make perfect seed. If cut, cut lengthwise. Single eyes will run out any potato. There is no other seed that will bear mutilation like a potato. The only wonder is that it does not run out completely.
